BRIEF HISTORY OF THE GENERAL STAFF

To better understand the history and functioning of a staff college, it would be helpful to know something of the origin and functions of the General Staff itself. What we know as the General Staff got its greatest impetus from the Prussians.<sup>1</sup> Although Gustavus Adolphus used a staff to assist him, he did most of the directing of his army personally. It was Frederick the Great<sup>2</sup> who may be looked upon as the founder of the modern military staff. This outstanding military genius required only a small staff himself but his thinking and techniques paved the way for modern staff development. It was Frederick who established in 1765 the Academie de Nobles, the first school for staff officers. This school was the forerunner of the famous Kriegsakademie or German War College.

Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Massenbach, and Muffling<sup>3</sup> are famous names in German military thinking and all contributed in evolving the complex of teamwork, duties, and responsibilities required to move, feed, and supply the army of the present. Schellendorff, another famous German writer on staff work (1875), quotes the military authority Clausewitz: "The General Staff is intended to convert the ideas of the general commanding into orders, not only by conveying the former to the troops, but far more by working out all necessary matters of detail, thus relieving the mind of the general from a great amount of trouble."<sup>4</sup> That is a fair definition even today.

All of the great military captains of history used staffs of a sort. Our captains of industry have staffs now surprisingly similar in function to a military staff. In the early days the staff consisted mainly of the personal entourage of the commander. With the years the staff developed more useful military functions. In the beginning these functions had to do primarily with requirements of transport and supply. It is not strange, then, that the German Staff was called first the Quartermaster General's Staff.<sup>5</sup> The additional staff members were at first engineers who attended to fortifications and to facilitating movement of supplies. Later they performed reconnaissance of routes and camp sites. Since the great military leaders were their own strategists and tacticians, few of them employed operations officers. Napoleon's staff was relatively small and not organized according to present day ideas. His Chief of Staff, Berthier, was charged rather with movement and mechanics of the headquarters and orders than with participating in the command function. The Chiefs of Staff of Corps belonging to Napoleon's marshals were more powerful and their staffs relatively larger; 16 for Soult's IV Corps and 24 for Ney's command.

THE AMERICAN GENERAL STAFF

The American staff developed slowly. Washington, fully aware of the importance of a General Staff,<sup>6</sup> was authorized in 1796 by the Congress only an Adjutant General, Quartermaster General, Commissary General of Stores and Provisions, Paymaster General, Commissary General of Musters, and a Chief of Engineers. Later he got a Wagon Master, a Commissary of Artillery Stores, a Director General of the Medical Department, and a Judge Advocate General. Washington's contribution to military staff thinking was the appointment of Lt Gen Von Steuben of Prussia as the first Inspector General of the Army.

Little progress was made after the Revolution despite the steady development of staff work in European armies. Grant's staff in the Virginia campaign was: one chief of staff, two secretaries, seven aides de camp, two assistant adjutants general, one inspector general, one chief quartermaster and assistant, one commissary general of subsistence and assistant, one chief of engineers, one provost marshal general and assistant. It is interesting to note that some of the Army intelligence at this time was furnished by Pinkerton's Detective Agency.<sup>7</sup> However, it was out of the experience of this war that the realization came of the necessity for trained staff officers. It was this realization which prompted the founding of the School of Application at Fort Leavenworth in 1881.

WHAT IS A GENERAL STAFF

The General Staff is the extension of the personality of the commander.<sup>8</sup> The modern staff is generally divided into four major functional divisions, i.e. G1, Personnel; G2, Intelligence; G3, Operations and Training; and G4, Supply. These functional divisions are found in all echelons from battalion to the Department of the Army, i.e. battalion, regiment, division, corps, army, army group, theater, and Department of the Army. Their activities are directed by an executive officer or chief of staff. From division and above these are called general staff officers. Under their direction and coordination work members of the Special Staff. The Special Staff is generally divided into the Technical Services: Quartermaster, Ordnance, Transportation, Medical, Signal, Engineer, and Chemical; and the Administrative Services: Adjutant General, Finance, Special Services, Provost Marshal, Inspector General, Judge Advocate, and Chaplain. It is the mission of the Command and General Staff College to train commanders and general staff officers.

From the time an officer is commissioned in the US Army, usually from a college or the US Military Academy, he goes progressively to school. Basic branch schools teach junior officers pertinent basic tactics and techniques (company level). Each branch of the Army also has an advanced school which teaches more senior officers advanced tactics and techniques (battalion and regimental level). Upon graduation from the advanced school of his branch, approximately 50 percent of all Army officers may be selected to attend a 10-month course at the Command and General Staff College. Here they learn tactics of higher units and techniques of combined arms to include division, corps, and army. Upon graduation a small percentage may be selected to attend a 10-month course at the Army War College. The War College teaches the duties of commanders and staffs of higher army echelons (army group, theater Army, zone of interior) with emphasis upon the Department of the Army.

The American concept of the general staff is quite different from the German idea. Modeled on the Prussian mold the German General Staff became a military caste. Initially it was a blood aristocracy. Although this was modified to permit selection of worthy individuals for staff training the attributes of the caste system remained. The General Staff became a professional military clique trained for offensive war. Its end was to gain ascendancy in all military matters in time of peace so that its power would be unquestioned in time of war. With increasing power the Chief of General Staff gained equal authority with the Minister of War and finally under Moltke displaced this political official. The Minister of War was relegated to the role of mere supplier of money and personnel.

This political tug of war did not take place in this country. The Congress, up to 1903 with the European model of the General Staff ever in mind reluctantly authorized only a bare minimum number of staff positions. Only after a bitter 3 years' struggle did the great statesman, Elihu Root win authorization for an American General Staff. Moreover, military men were mindful of the essentially democratic nature of our Army.<sup>9</sup> This democratic heritage nurtured quite a different general staff from the Prussian pattern. Instead of creating a select hierarchy of lifetime professionals whose best interests were served by promoting war, the American system sponsored a large group of trained specialists to meet the national emergency requirement. It is true that the American staff had a nucleus of trained professionals; however, the interests of this group have been little concerned with the formulation of national policy. Certainly the Command and General Staff College has had no part in national affairs other than the provision of versatile efficient commanders and staff officers for the Nation's defense.

<sup>8</sup> Otto L. Nelson, Jr., Maj Gen, National Security and the General Staff (Washington 1946), p. 572: "The General Staff is a part of the command element and it exists only because of the complexity of command. If all commanders of all sized units had the capacity to personally perform the planning, coordination and supervising duties incident to exercising command there would be no justification for a general staff. To perform these tasks the commander of any large unit must have a general staff which as a body acts as his alter ego, greatly enlarging his capacity to command but without taking away from him any of his attributes of command. General staff duties are always the duties the commander would perform himself if he were able to."

Along with the courses for regular officers there were habitually courses for training Reserve and National Guard officers of the civilian components of the Army. Of the approximately 18,000 officers graduated from this great staff training school during World War II, the majority were, of course, civilian soldiers. All were imbued with the cooperation and team play which is characteristically American. They were given at Leavenworth the tools of the staff officer's trade. These tools have turned out in the bloody competition of two world wars to be equal to the best.

<sup>9</sup> John J. McCloy, "In Defense of the Army Mind," Harper's Magazine (April 1947), Stimson to the General Officers of the Army September 20, 1945: "You and those whom you represent have shown yourselves brave but not brutal, self confident but not arrogant and above all you have guided and wielded the mighty power of this great country to another victory without loss of our liberties or the usurpation of any power."

APPENDIX II

THE MEN BEHIND LEAVENWORTH

Leavenworth has, like all famous institutions, a heritage of men who have contributed to her greatness. The period 1937 to date includes only a few of those who have by their breadth of vision and clear thinking contributed to the accomplishment of the College mission and as a consequence to the everlasting glory of our great Nation. The accomplishments of most of these individuals with regard to the College have been covered in preceding chapters.

BRIGADIER GENERAL CHARLES M. BUNDEL

Brig Gen Charles M. Bundel's contribution can best be summarized by an excerpt from a speech to the class at Fort Leavenworth by his successor, Gen Lesley J. McNair, who said on June 20, 1939:

"I know that we all miss today another distinguished soldier—the one whom you have full right to think of as Commandant—General Bundel. It was while we both were here right after the war that I first came to know his fine qualities. He was not noisy, but he thought hard and deeply and soundly. No one could have been more concerned for the happiness and welfare of his command. His faith in this school was abiding, and you may be sure he found greatest satisfaction and pleasure in terminating his service here. I know that he will be touched to learn that we are missing him and hailing his contributions to the school and to the Army."

With some prophetic insight Gen Bundel said of Leavenworth:

"This school is also a great military laboratory in which tactical and strategic doctrines and methods applicable to large units are studied, crystallized, and tested. The success or failure of our armies will depend largely upon the soundness of the doctrines and methods they employ. To a considerable degree therefore the future of our country is being written right within these walls."

BRIGADIER GENERAL LESLEY J. MCNAIR

Brig Gen Lesley J. McNair, as Commandant, spoke to the graduating class of the College on June 20, 1939. He was an artilleryman and drew an apt metaphor in comparing the equipment gained by the students to artillery ammunition. In relating that two Leavenworth graduates had attained the position of Chief of Staff of the Army, he said:

"The two Chiefs of Staff did not carry their Leavenworth ammunition around in their caissons. They have been firing it ever since with deadly effectiveness, in producing results of benefit to the service first and secondarily to the everlasting credit of Leavenworth and themselves."

In this simple, direct analogy, Gen McNair typified the type of thinking which he contributed to the College and later as trainer of the combat armies to the Nation as a whole. This splendid soldier and thinker devised a grading system called after him the McNair "Law of Merit" which combined grades on marked problems to produce final student class standings with results quite similar to the present system of standard deviations. His untimely and tragic death as a result of our own bombing while observing combat operations in Normandy was a great loss to the Armed Forces and the country. Fortunately, his stupendous job of building the Nation's ground forces and training them into fighting teams was then almost complete. His accomplishments are rich evidence of the high quality and clear, down-to-earth thinking which Gen McNair gave to the Command and General Staff School.

BRIGADIER GENERAL EDMUND L. GRUBER

Brig Gen Edmund L. Gruber was a lean, serious looking soldier whose dignified mien belied the nickname "Snitz" and the music hidden underneath. Maj Gen Robert M. Danford, a close personal friend, then Chief of Field Artillery, spoke of Gen Gruber to the graduating Third Special Class June 21, 1941, soon after Gen Gruber's sudden death. He said of the author of the famous artillery song: "A man of restless driving energy, a man always intolerant of inefficiency, intolerant of officers who did not exert themselves. . . he lived and exemplified the best traditions of the service."

BRIGADIER GENERAL H. H. FULLER

Brig Gen H. H. Fuller came to the school from duty as military attaché to France. In this position he witnessed the German entry into Paris. He was alarmed by American complacency in the face of grave danger and made talks on his experiences and conclusions to the class during his tour as Commandant. He obtained jeeps, then very new, by rehabilitating some damaged in the Louisiana Maneuver area to make student reconnaissance on problems more realistic. He put in a drainage system on the Sherman Field area and strengthened the dikes to prevent the annual flooding. General Fuller was an active man personally supervising the project in his own jeep. His aide ran a bulldozer, they say. A sudden order in November 1941 to take command of a combat division, the 41st, which he fought in the New Guinea Campaign undoubtedly pleased this restless soldier.

MAJOR GENERAL KARL TRUESDELL

Maj Gen Karl Truesdell bore the brunt of the expansion of the school to meet the wartime mission. He brought a world of varied experience to the task. He entered the Army as an enlisted man in 1901 and by 1904 earned a commission as second lieutenant of Infantry. His first contact with Leavenworth was in 1911 when he was ordered to the Army Signal School here. After service in World War I he returned to Fort Leavenworth in 1920 as an instructor in the General Service Schools. He graduated from the Army School of the Line, from the General Staff School also at Leavenworth, and remained as an instructor. He later graduated from the Army War College and the Naval War College and served on the War Department General Staff. He then served with the 15th Infantry in Tientsin, China, and upon his return to the States as Director of the Intelligence Course at the Army War College. He commanded the 16th Infantry at Fort Jay, New York, and the Infantry Section of the 1st Division. He assumed command of the 1st Division and later commanded VI Corps from October to December 1940. In March of 1942 he was ordered to Fort Leavenworth where he remained through the war. It is typical of this fine soldier that he appreciated the great responsibility and importance of his Leavenworth assignment in spite of undoubted disappointment at being deprived of wartime command of troops. His vision, his grasp of the job to be done, and his vigorous execution of a somewhat unglamorous task in time of war are a great tribute to Gen Truesdell. There is no doubt whatsoever that his contribution to the armed forces and to the Nation in time of great stress was outstanding.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL LEONARD T. GEROW

Lt Gen Leonard T. Gerow like Gen Marshall is a graduate of Virginia Military Institute. He was appointed second lieutenant upon graduation in 1911. He first served at Fort Leavenworth with the 19th Infantry in January 1912. After service in World War I and in Washington with the Chief of Infantry and with the War Department General Staff, he came to the Command and General Staff School. He graduated an honor student in 1926. After duty in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of War he graduated from the Army War College in 1931. He was Chief of Staff of the experimental 2d Division at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, in 1939. In 1940 he was assigned to the Infantry School, where he was Assistant Commandant for a short time. In December 1941 he was appointed Chief of the War Plans Division of the War Department General Staff. He later commanded the 29th Infantry Division and then V Corps. He commanded this corps through the Normandy invasion and until January 15, 1945, when he was given command of the Fifteenth Army. He assumed command of Fort Leavenworth in October 1945.

Gen Gerow had experience with all levels of the Army school system, having been Commander of the Signal Corps School at Fort Sam Houston in 1919 and Assistant Commandant of the Chemical School in 1931. His record as a combat commander and General Staff planner attest his high caliber and his eminent qualifications for his duty as Commandant of the Command and General Staff College and to head the board to study the Army educational system. His selection for these tasks at the crucial reorganizational period which followed World War II is again evidence of the care and wisdom of those who have the welfare of the Army and the defense of our Nation in their custody.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL MANTON S. EDDY

Lt Gen Manton S. Eddy was commissioned second lieutenant in 1916. He attended the First Provisional Officer's Course at Fort Leavenworth in March 1917. He was assigned to the Infantry Board at Fort Benning, Georgia, after serving as a unit commander during World War I. He completed the 2-year course at the Command and General Staff School in 1934 and remained for 4 years as an instructor. He became Assistant Division Commander of the 9th Infantry Division and later as division commander took the division to North Africa. After leading the 9th Division in campaigns in Africa, Sicily, and France, Gen Eddy was assigned to command the XII Corps of Gen Patton's Third Army. He was appointed Chief of Information for the Department of the Army in 1947. He was assigned to Leavenworth in January 1948 and left in June 1950 to take command of the Seventh Army in Europe. This splendid administrator and leader, endowed with sympathy, kindness, and interest in all about him, surrounded himself with able assistants and was thereby able to guide the school and the Post through an era characterized by progress and friendliness. In addition, Gen Eddy was able to give his time to other essential duties and studies such as the Eddy Board Report which completed the crystallization of the postwar Army school system.

MAJOR GENERAL HORACE L. McBRIDE

Maj Gen Horace L. McBride started his career of association with the business of Army education soon after he was commissioned in 1916. He was instructor at the Officers' Training Camp, Fort Meyer, Virginia, in 1917. After combat service with the artillery overseas in World War I he returned to a battalion command and to graduate from the Artillery School at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. In 1923 he was assigned as Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut. He graduated from the Command and General Staff School in June 1928 and went to the Artillery School as an instructor. He graduated from the Army War College in 1936 and was assigned as instructor at the Command and General Staff School. During World War II he was Division Artillery Commander and later Division Commander of the 80th Infantry Division. As a part of the Third Army, the division fought throughout the campaigns in Europe and remained for the occupation. Gen McBride commanded the XX Corps until its deactivation and subsequently the 9th Division. He organized and headed the American Military Mission to Turkey at Ankara from August 1947 to August 1950. He assumed command of the Command and General Staff College October 6, 1950, and of the Post July 1, 1951.

BRIGADIER GENERAL HARLAN N. HARTNESS

Brig Gen Harlan N. Hartness was Assistant Commandant from May 1948 until June 1950 and Acting Commandant until the arrival of Gen McBride October 6, 1950. He was a graduate of the Command and General Staff School in 1935 and of the Kriegssacademie in Berlin in 1937. He was an instructor at West Point and the Command and General Staff School and served 2 years in the G3 Division of the War Department General Staff. He was Assistant Division Commander of the 94th and 26th Divisions during World War II and of the 7th Division on Korean occupation duty. He was Acting Division Commander of both the 26th and the 7th Divisions for short periods. He contributed much to the Army's program of providing manuals for instruction of its expanding Army. His keen interest and alert attention to detail coupled with sound thinking contributed substantially to accomplishment of the College mission during his extensive connection with it. He was rewarded by command of the 4th Infantry Division and recent promotion to the rank of major general.

However, this outstanding assemblage of commandants, regardless of their superb qualifications could not have succeeded except for a group of exceptionally able assistant commandants. These men supervised the production and presentation of the actual College instruction, consequently bearing a huge burden in detail and determination of quality.

Col K. B. Edmunds was Assistant Commandant from 1938 to July 1941. He saw the transition from the long course to the short wartime courses and undoubtedly contributed much to the planning involved in the transition. He advocated the reorganization of the faculty along General Staff lines and adoption of the small class system and other measures which were subsequently placed in effect.

Brig Gen William A. Campbell was Assistant Commandant in 1944 and 1945. Graduate and instructor of the Command and General Staff College and graduate of the Army War College, Gen Campbell added distinguished service in both World Wars to the experience he brought to his assignment at the College.

Maj Gen Otto P. Weyland, Air Force combat veteran, was brought to the College in 1945 to give balance to the faculty and to increase emphasis on air instruction in keeping with the increased importance of the air arm. He was a graduate of the Command and General Staff course in 1938. It is interesting to note that Gen Weyland has recently been assigned to the command of the Tactical Air Forces in the Far East.

Maj Gen William F. Dean is another famous Assistant Commandant (June 1946 to September 1947). Gen Dean was a graduate of the Command and General Staff School, 1936, and of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces and the Army War College. He was Division Commander of the 44th Infantry Division in World War II and was reported missing in action while leading another division the 24th Infantry Division, in the fighting at Taejon, Korea. The influence of such prominent combat commanders on the thinking and operation of the College has been profoundly beneficial in keeping the instruction eminently practical.

Col Harry E. "Machine gun" Kelly was Acting Assistant Commandant under Gen Harness in 1950 and up to the time of his departure in May 1951. He attained his nickname as an instructor of weapons at the Infantry School from 1933 to 1937. He graduated from the Command and General Staff College in 1938. He also served as instructor at the College before service overseas as regimental commander with the 30th Infantry Division. A born instructor, Col Kelly contributed richly to the College from his fund of experience and sound tactical background.

Other Acting Assistant Commandants who gave much to advancement of the College mission and reputation were Col M. C. Shallenberger, Brig Gen A. W. Pence, and Col (later Maj Gen) G. R. "Doc" Cook.

It is a difficult task to name all of the individuals whose wealth of experience, devotion to duty, and breadth of vision have in sum made of this College the institution it is today. The numbers will mount closely to the total figure of the faculty as it has been constituted year after year. Certainly the department heads, section chiefs, not to mention the individual authors, are greatly deserving of recognition and acclaim. Another large group which merits great praise is the large number of enlisted men and women and those faithful ones, the civilian employees, who give year after year unstintingly of their time and effort. For it is not the great men alone who have made for this institution its mighty record of outstanding success, though theirs was the guiding hand; but the total of brains, blood, sweat—yea and even tears—which went into the task from all of the team. To them is due the largest measure of the credit, to them let us give the accolade "well done."

APPENDIX XVII

ANCIENT VEHICLES AVAILABLE FROM FORT LEAVENWORTH MUSEUM<sup>1</sup>

The Fort Leavenworth Museum has on hand a number of wheeled vehicles which are in condition to permit them to travel or be used for purposes such as they were originally constructed. However these vehicles must not be towed behind motor cars or trucks at speeds in excess of 5 miles per hour.

Whenever the Museum's vehicles are rented, the person renting them must establish his identity and the financial responsibility of the activity he represents. Prior to renting vehicles, permission to do so must be secured from the Headquarters Commandant, Command and General Staff College.

The person or activity renting the equipment must assume full responsibility for the equipment from the time it leaves the Museum until it is returned thereto. Damage to vehicles beyond that which is due to fair wear and tear will be paid for by the renter. The service charges listed herein will cover the cost of repairs due to fair wear and tear.

The person or activity renting vehicles will arrange for and pay all costs of transportation required to transport them and other equipment from and return to the Museum. All financial arrangements will be made with the Book Department, Command and General Staff College, and checks made payable to that agency.

Minimum service charges are quoted below and cover the absence of the vehicles from the Museum for 3 days, including the days of departure and return. For each additional day of absence a charge of one third of the service charge per vehicle will be made.
